My graphics intensive YouTube videos are powered by Photoshop and Sketch You can use Photoshop in just about any environment, both online and offline. Compared to other big competitors such as GIMP, Photoshop has a broader range of features and is a lot more user-friendly. Check out my new video covering the Photoshop Tutorial series. In this tutorial, we will take a look at: Why use Photoshop and what it can do? Adobe Photoshop and Elements can be used for multiple purposes including photo editing, graphic design, web design and many other things. If you are a graphic designer or web designer, Photoshop is a great tool to create and edit vector graphics, create web graphics and web logos. If you are a web designer, you can use Photoshop and it's many filters to create stylish designs for logos, websites and more. Photoshop can create high-quality images from plain photos or take interesting and creative photos and make them even better. It can make tedious tasks into one big beautiful photo and it can clean out unsightly blemishes, fix facial imperfections, retouch old images and make them look brand new. Photoshop can convert photos into digital prints and you can share beautiful prints with friends and family. Adobe Photoshop and Elements also includes a host of other powerful features that make it a very popular tool. Why not just use Photoshop? There are many good reasons why you might want to use Photoshop instead of other, more simple image editors, such as GIMP. Some of the reasons include: Unlimited Photo Editing You can edit and tweak almost any photo with Photoshop - and that includes applying filters, crops, adjusting levels, correcting misalignments, create interesting comps, correct red-eye and much more. You can use Photoshop for editing RAW photos from your camera and then convert the edited photos to JPEG. To a photo editor, Photoshop is a powerhouse. Compared to GIMP, Photoshop has a much richer set of features and you have the advantage of an extremely powerful editor at your disposal. Transparency International have ranked the 2017 Corruption Perceptions Index, coming out as the 132nd anti-corruption organisation in the world. Topping the list is Finland (ranked #8) and Ethiopia at #139. What is the Corruption Perceptions Index? The index is a composite of 10 corruption-related variables and assigned to each listed government in 172 countries (including states, autonomous regions, or similar entities of the UN). The 10 indicators include: Anti-corruption institutions (including police, judiciary, parliament, and media); the size of and responsiveness to civil society; the legal framework against corruption; corruption in procurement (including public-private partnerships); public sector corruption; public trust in government; level of public spending on corruption prevention; level of corruption in the executive branch; the rule of law and institutional stability; and the number of officials and agents charged or convicted with corruption. Why is India in the middle of the pack? Despite having a reputation for great corruption scandals, India actually compares highly when placed against corruption rankings. It ranks #19, and has a score of 5.5 on the corruption scale. Anti-corruption institutions in India are ranked 63rd, the size of civil society (200,000 NGOs and population that is close to the rest of the world) is 51st, the legal framework against corruption is 66th and the legal framework against corruption is 110th. On the public expenditure on corruption prevention, India comes in at #33, with a score of 0.84, while India comes in at #78 when it comes to the rule of law and institutional stability. India's score is due to its laxity in prosecuting corruption cases. India was ranked as the sixth most corrupt country in Asia in 2016. What does the ranking mean? Corruption is an epidemic in India. Different policies implemented by different governments will affect India's ranking. However, the 2017 Corruption Perceptions Index (CPI) scores released by Transparency International shows India isn't very far away from other countries in the ranking. Its score is lower than that of Argentina, Kazakhstan, Mongolia, and the Philippines and higher than that of Ukraine, Armenia, Nicaragua, and Japan. Corruption prevails in India's administration. The Public Finance Management (PFM) Law of 2015 has been ruled unconstitutional in 2017 by a Delhi High Court bench. The Law intended to control government expenditure. The
